“ "When I met Donna I was the pesky little sister but she made me feel important. When Christopher was born, she allowed me to stay with them in their little apt to help, and for the next many years she honored me by letting me care for precious Christopher with her. This time was the start of my love of nursing. How I grieved when I left for college in Ann Arbor. More recently we shared an interest in fiber arts and it was so fun to visit Donna and see what she was creating. Like her recent cross stitch saying, I know she "slid into home" celebrating..."
